Cameron's heart beat against his chest as his paced up and down the living room. Mitchell was late again from work for the third time that week and Cameron was being to become uneasy about all of this.

"Cam I am sorry I am late. Work was so busy time just got away from me sorry." Mitchell pushed of his stiff jacket and throw his car key into the dim blue bawl next to the door.

"Why didn't you call me. I planed us a romantic dinner. I even got someone to keep Lily for the night." Cam said as he walked passed Mitchell in to the dinning room where their food, now stone cold, laid out for them to eat and the candles almost burnt out from the long hours of waiting.

"Cam please I'm sorry. I promise I will make it up to you." Mitchell reached out but Cameron moved our of his reach.

"I need some space if you don't mind." Cameron whispered softly as he turned away from the love of his life.

Cameron had been walking around for a few minutes when a gentle hand rested against his shoulder. Tears welled up in his eyes as he turned around and came face to face with his ex-boy friend Erwin.

"Oh..."

"Well it's nice to see you too Cam. Are you doing alright?" Erwin asked as he drugged his smooth fingers crossed Cam's red tear stained checks.

"Why wouldn't I be?" Cam asked as he turned his head.

Erwin turned his head back to face him and kissed him softly against his lips. Cameron couldn't hold back as he melted into the familiar embrace.

"Cam I wa..." Mitchell couldn't believe what he had just seen and yet the pain was beyond real.

It has been a week since Mitchell had last set eyes on his husband and he still felt the pain as if he had just witnessed the incident.

"Mitc please just let me explain." Cameron tired for what felt like the hundredth time that day alone but Mitchell would not give in.

If Cameron really once to fix things he will realize that a bit of whining would not fix this not one bit.

Thanks for reading.
